John Youngblood Award of Excellence

John Youngblood

The quiet, unassuming man from Oklahoma was a picture of single-minded dedication to commercial vehicle safety and possessed a tireless commitment to excellence in inspector training.

John worked as a staff member for the first two Challenge competitions (now called NAIC) and, on the date of the Oklahoma City bombing, was making preparations for Challenge '95. John was killed in that bombing.

Without hesitation, John considered his association with the Challenge competition to be one of the highlights of his long career in safety.

Every day of his life, John demonstrated the high standards and ideals that serve as the benchmark for all of us who follow.

His leadership, unswerving dedication to duty, and pursuit of excellence continue to be an inspiration to all.
